ABOUT MONKEY

Born from a Stone Egg acted on by elemental forces during ancient times, Monkey became king of the Monkeys of Water Cave Mountain. Worried about growing old and dying he travelled the Earth looking to learn the Secrets of Immortality. Eventually he did from a Taoist Sorcerer called the Patriarch, but his mischievous nature got him into trouble and he was dismissed and told never to mention that he had been a student of the Patriarch. Returning home he first drove off the Demon of Havoc who had taken over Water Mountain Cave in his absence, before arming his monkeys with iron weapons and becoming the king of the surrounding area.

It was then that the Planet Venus decided it would be a good idea to invite Monkey to heaven to keep an eye on him. Monkey could not control his rebellious nature and ran amok in the Western Heaven. He was only subdued by Buddha who was visiting from the Eastern Heaven who imprisoned him under a mountain for 500 years until Tripitaka arrived. Monkey has joined the monk in his quest to collect the missing Buddhist scrolls from India. Tripitaka controls Monkey when he gets out of hand using the Headache Sutra which contracts the golden headband monkey wears.

Monkey is armed with the Iron staff of the Pole Star, which can grow as big as temple column and shrink to the size of a needle, which Monkey places behind his ear. He often sees through the human disguises of Demons, with his fiery eyes of demon seeing, although it gets him trouble with his companions for attacking seemingly innocent humans. Another magic trick he knows is how to produce Little Monkeys, copies of himself, from hairs he plucks from his fur and blows life into.
